THE LORNE ATHLETIC CLUB AT THE THEATRE ROYAL.

('ne of the most successful entertainments that has been given for years was the Assault at-Arms by the Lorne Athletic Club of the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders at the Theatre Royal on Saturday evening. The house was well filled and the different items and the whole programme generally were carried out with a spirit and liveliness that is too often absent at similar porformances. The programme commenced with a Dumb Bells exhibition by a squad. The men engaged in this, as well as in the saccoeding exercises, showed a desterity of movement and smart and soldier-like obedience and attention to orders and time, which reflected not only great credit on the safe. the men thouselves but also on their "coach." This exhibition was succeeded by a performance on the Parallel Bars by Instructor Mills, Ser weant Thomas, Corporal McLaughlin and Privates McCatcheon, McLachlan, and Lomas. The various feats performed in this exercise by one and all were unexcontionable, and a performance which often has a tondency to become wonrisome to the uninitiated was enjoyed by all through the dexterity of the performance. this as throughout the whole programme, the Band of the Regiment, with the assistance as two clowns, who were really worthy of the name and knew their business, gave She gave him some jewellery and $5 to go off to an additional interest to the several items and kept any one exhibition from dragging or becoming devoid of interest. The Quarterstaff Combat between Private Hamilton and Privato McCall created plenty of amusement. The combatants were pretty equally matched, hard telling him that he would put it in a certain blows were frequent, and at the finish both men were loudly recalled. In the physical drill the he would find it had turned into $100 note. On uniformity of motion and mechanical precision and nothing but stones there. of the men made a comparatively uninteresting movement a spectacle well worth watching even to the civilian, and the same may be said of the Bword Exercise which followed. Captain Davidson and Instructor Mills then gave an exhibition Changking was going ont, she ran into a boat to be reminded of the very new and then. These the Lavoisier of the Sugar Works managed to of Fencing and Ancient Combat. In both exercises Captain Davidson, who if we mistake not has won high honours, showed himself master of his art, while every praise is due to Instructor Mills for the very gallant show he made against such odds. The Boxing, heavy weight and light weight, was somewhat woak, and resembled more an exhibition show than any attempt at real work. The first part of the programme concluded with exercises on the Vaulting Horse, in which some claver motions were performed.

The second part of the programme opened with somewhat longthy, but nevertheless very interesting exhibition on the Horizontal Bar Sergeant Thomas, Corporal McLaughlin, Privates McCutcheon, McLachlan, and Lomas, lod vellous feats, which drew forth very hearty whose names unfortunately did not appear in the programme, but who were entitled to every praise for their really clever feats with the clubs. The Bayonet Exercise sufficed to show the precision and uniformity, which was particularly displayed throughout, while a single combat with these weapons was successfully carried through by Instructor Mills and Corporal McLaughlin. This item was followed by a sample of Highland Dancing by Sergeant Piper Hall and Colour-Sergeant Auld. Both men deserve praise, but the first named should be specially mentioned for not overtake Goldfuchs, who wen by four his artistic and graceful performance. combat with sword and shield between Cap- Time. The entertainment closed with a pretty and well conceived sketch entitled "Life on Active Service." The whole performance was carried through most successfully, and being a novelty here was viewed with the greatest interest by a crowded house. At turning home laughing and singing and carrythe outset he showed that sanitation possesses a jug a green bough decorated with tags of red bistory as old as the oldest of religious—that, indeed, originally it was a religious observance. He dwelt with emphasis on the extent to which dampness caused disease, and niged the use of hollow bricks, burnt so hard as to be non-absor- and noises in the head of 29 years standing bent. Common bricks; he said, absorb as much by a simple remedy, will send a description of it as a pint or pound of water, so that the external free to any person who applies to Nicholson, 21 walls of a cottage one brick thick, consisting of Bedford Square, London, W. C., England, | 1869 12,000 bricks, would be capable of holding 1,500 gallons or 63 tons of water. Hence it followed that the act of living in new houses or in those which had long been unoccupied was one of tended with terrible consequences. The great principle of modern canitation was, he declared, circulation versus stagnation—the drawing away, at every moment, by an uncessing mechanical power of all sewage matter, and casting it, undecomposed upon the land, so Old Malea that it might, through the intermediate world of plants, break out into life again, Older Malwa and give sustenance to man and beast. Passing from the community to the individual, he wished Paths (New) $525 c per chest. force of the old motto, "Wash and be clean." This lesson he especially desired to force upon the young, so that personal cleanliness might not only become a habit of life, but a habit felt as a necessity. In this connection he mentioned that the Order of the Bath, which Her Majesty had recently been pleased to confer upon him, was in fact the order of the washed. In early times some of the knights took to washing themselves, and then kept themselves apart from those who were unwashed. Others having washed themselves, were admitted as companious, and the purification led to its being made a religious order in the reign of Henry IV. Finally, Sir Edwin drew from the history of the past omens of hope for the future, and held out the modest expectation that every family may, in a happier day, be provided with a dwelling well drained, well warmed, well lighted, well supplied with water, and with all the comforts for preparation of food and for wholesome repose. He might have suggested more had he gone in for laxury, but a long experience had shown him so many crass dangers from luxury that he had said nothing about it in this address, convinced that luxury would follow comfort fast enough to be compatible with safety without any outside pressure on the part of sanitary reformers.

We were there fore not sorry to accept an invitation from M de Ayala to pay him a visit at Ay, and to see the whole process of champagne-making. The little town of Ay stands on a chalk hill above the green waters of the River Marne. All round are low hills, closely covered with vines attached to short sticks. The value of these vines is enormous, and reaches as high a figure as from £1,200 to £2,000 as acre. The vineyards are held by a great number of proprietors, small and large; and the value of the vines and the price of the grapes they yield depend upon the care with which they have been tended and cultivated. The grapes are bought from the growers by the caque, a measure of sixty kilos, and cost this year 285 fr. the caque. takes seven caques of grapes to make a cask of wine, and each cask contains forty-four gallons. or 240 bottles. The grapes are at an unusually high price this year, owing to a forced competi tion between the various wine makers; and the notonous beauty was greatly enhanced by the knowledge of their potential value. In the great press were 5,000lbs. of grapes undergoing slow and steady pressure; and from a pipe flowed into a huge vat the expressed vine-juice sweet inscious fluid recalling the sweet wines given one to drink in villages high up the Maritime Alps and which you are always told you must drink on the spot, transportation to the valley below being fatal to these wines. The submitted four times to pressure: the first time le vin curé is the product. The grapes at the sides of the pressor are then piled up in the middle, and the mass is pressed again. This process is repeated three times. The product only of the first two pressings is used to make the finest champagne; that of the third is sold to manufacturers of the inferior qualities, and that of the fourth to makers of sweet red wines and brandies. From the vat the expressed wine is we poured into casks which have been previously de dedorized by burning sulphur inside them, the fumes of which throw down any colouring matter obtained from the grapes—champagne Haiphong... 30.48 30.33 14 Hongaing made from black full-flavoured grapes.
